Emon

SFX: opening theme

Reporter: Good evening. It's the year 1999 and we are here today talking with Emon Stuart, a student at the Kinder Elementary School. Tell us what's been happening, Emon.

Emon: Well, I don't know when it started but now it's completely out of hand. I can't go anywhere without being touched.

Reporter: I understand your teachers literally have to place you in a fenced area on the playground.

Emon: Yes, and it's really hard to play sports that way, let me tell you. I usually end up sitting on the ground, right in the middle, drawing chalk figures on the pavement.

Reporter: Why in the middle?

Emon: Because some of the kids find sticks and use them to get at me through the fence. I'm safest in the middle.

Reporter: That's terrible. Can't you switch schools?

Emon: This is my fourth one in the last six months.

Reporter: You mean it's everywhere?

Emon: Yeah, apparently it is. I guess I'll just have to wait for this game to die down.

Reporter: Ladies and gentlemen, you've heard it here first on Investigative Retorts. The strange and sad fate of one student, Emon Stuart, the victim of a game called Poke Emon.

SFX: closing theme
