ANNOUNCER : A cow breed started in Texas? Today we are talking to the Santa Gertrudis.

SFX: Moooo

REPORTER : Tell me again what year it was.

MONKEY : Oh, somewhere around 1910.

REPORTER : And it was at the King Ranch in Kingsville, Texas?

MONKEY : Yep. One of the gentlemen there became interested in Brahman cattle. Figured a jolt of Brahman could maybe make their range cattle a might better.

REPORTER : So, they mated a half blood Shorthorn-Brahman with some purebred Shorthorn females.

MONKEY : Yep. That they did. After about eight years, their descendants were such good-lookin' cattle that the King Ranch took a go at cross-breeding Shorthorns and Brahmans.

REPORTER : Were the Brahmans purebred?

MONKEY : Nope. The young bulls they used were three-fourths and seven-eighths Brahman.

REPORTER : So, what's that? Everything but one hind leg and a hip?

MONKEY : Ha-ha.

REPORTER : Seriously, how do they determine a number like that?

MONKEY : I have no idea. As far as I'm concerned, it's like tryin' to count cactus needles.

REPORTER : And your name -

MONKEY : What about my name?

REPORTER : Monkey Business. What kind of a name is that for a cow?

MONKEY : All present day Santa Gertrudis cattle can be traced back to a foundation sire named Monkey.

REPORTER : Monkey?

MONKEY : Monkey.

REPORTER : Monkey.

MONKEY : It gets hot in Texas.

REPORTER : It must.
