ANNOUNCER: Cows in Norway? Today we are talking to the Telemark.

SFX: Moooo

TELEMARK: Hurdy-gurdy hurdy-gurdy hurdy-gurdy.

REPORTER: I take it you're Scandinavian.

TELEMARK: You can take what you like, but I'm a cow. A Telemark cow. I live in Norway.

REPORTER: Do you like it there?

TELEMARK: Oh yes. The mountains are beautiful in southeastern Norway. I spend my time there grazing and grazing and grazing. Hurdy-gurdy hurdy-gurdy hurdy-gurdy.

REPORTER: That's high roughage.

TELEMARK: High mountains.

REPORTER: No, I mean that kind of grazing is considered a high roughage diet.

TELEMARK: Well, it suits us very well. We are very efficient milk producers on a high roughage diet. Our live weight is 400 to 500 kilograms.

REPORTER: And your dead weight?

TELEMARK: Not nearly so much.

REPORTER: You have very interesting colors. You have a solid reddish color on each side that looks like it was painted on you with a roller.

TELEMARK: And the rest of me is a much lighter more whitish color. Red-sided is what they call these markings on my hide.

REPORTER: So if I laid you on your side and placed you between two pieces of bread -

TELEMARK: It would look like mayonnaise was squishing out of all four sides of the bread.

REPORTER: That is so neat!

TELEMARK: Yes! But you might break some teeth on my horns and hooves! Hurdy-gurdy hurdy-gurdy hurdy-gurdy. Bye now!

SFX: Moooo
